The Mystique of Sanur

Bali has long haunted the dreams and imaginations of artists and travelers. At the heart of this fascination is the historical town of Sanur

Sanur is one of Bali's oldest known settlements. Steeped in history and rich in culture, Sanur is famed for its arts scene and cultural community. In the 1930s, Sanur gained a reputation as Bali's artistic hub, attracting world-famous cultural figures. The A-list group of visitors who stayed or made homes in Sanur include artists Walter Spies and Miguel Covarrubias, actor Charlie Chaplin, playwright Noel Coward and heiress Barbara Hutton.

From 1967-90 Bali entered a halcyon period as the rich, talented and famous all beat a path to Sanur's balmy shores. Across the road from The Pavilions is the site of the world's first tropical boutique hotel, the Tanjung Sari. A sanctuary for monarchs, media barons and mega celebrities, Sanur played host to such icons as Greta Garbo, Jackie Onassis, Elizabeth Taylor, David Bowie, Sting, Mick Jagger and Princess Diana of Wales.

Guests could idle away their days relaxing in their gardens and villas, or on the beach, surrounded by the local art and cultural artifacts. In the evenings they would dine in each other's villas. There was also a supporting cast of bohemians, adventurers, itinerant artists and academics who also made their way to Sanur, adding to the creative buzz. Bali's roads may be a lot busier today, yet Sanur has kept its original sense of privacy, romance and quiet charm. The town remains a peaceful haven, rich in the art and culture for which it is famed. Above all, Sanur retains the same welcoming spirit and warmth that first greeted foreign visitors.

As you relax and drink in the beauty of your surroundings in The Pavilions, you may imagine a time when you would be nodding a greeting to a sarong-clad Greta Garbo or Mick Jagger as you each retired to your respective villas.
